

ABOUT VBRRB

Highlighting the relationship university-socio-economic sector makes it possible to develop understanding outcomes of the university scientific research. Indeed, the accumulation of research results at the universities and the research centers, particularly from theses and research projects, is observed. However, little information on these results concretization is available in the economic field. This unavailability is essentially due to the absence of meetings between the two actors; the research institutions and the bio-industrial sector. In Algeria, the bio-industry is very varied, characterized by an upward progression. Thus, diverse activities energy this sector; pharmaceutical, para-pharmaceutical, agro-food production, and waste management. All these activities are closely related to the health and the food security of the citizen or the need to pool efforts to ensure their sustainability.

The production of living things generates an overwhelming amount of information that complicates the instantaneous management of these data. For that, using bioinformatics is a more than essential means to effectively analyze this flow of information. Using this tool by the mentioned sectors allows both of them to provide quick and reliable answers.

This seminar is a meeting event that its main objective is to bring the active elements ; scientific research fields and industry, together to develop mechanisms that make it possible to make the usable or marketable results and skills of the university research in the biotechnology sector has a real socio-economic impact.
